

Sunday is the anniversary of 9/11. It can be important to set aside time to remember this tragedy, even though remembering may make you feel sad or angry. One reason we remember is that we want to preserve the memory of the victims who lost their lives and those who died in service to others. Some of you may know that a member of our faculty lost a son in this tragedy.

In the face of this disaster, we saw courage: firefighters, police officers, and paramedics rushed to help. We saw selflessness: strangers helped strangers. We saw love: people from around the world sent cards, supplies, and comfort.

This is an opportunity to turn something negative into a positive activity by honoring the good work of others and by doing good works ourselves. Today, look for opportunities to be courageous, selfless, and loving, and if possible, say thank you to those who work so hard to keep us well and safe.

With something to think about, this is Principal, Kelley. Make it a great day ... or not. The choice is yours.
